GOOD EVENING EVERYBODY:

money item.

The news from Washington tonight comes under three headings - those three inevitable headings familiar to every grammar school pupil in civics. The White House, the Senate, and the House of Representatives, the great Tinker-to-Evers-to-Chance combination of American politics.

The White House news today is in big figures, and the White House sure can make them big when it starts pump-priming, spending, revitalizing business - as it's called today. The newest move reported does not concern the billion dollars or more to be dedicated to direct unemployment relief, W.P.A. work relif projects. Nor is it the same as the billion and a half dollars to be lent to business by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that R.F.O. business lending appropriation now before Congress.

W.P.A. work relief expenditures are one thing, and R.F.C. business loans are another. The news today tells of still a third big

The report is that the President and his advisors have prepared a plan for lending a billion and a half dollars to local political agencies - states, towns, municipalities. This wast sum to be spent locally in such fashion as to increase local business and provide employment. Housing projects, slum clearance, expenditures for better living conditions - these would be major objectives. Those loans for local spending would be distributed chiefly in places where business conditions are were the worst - where unemployment is the greatest.

They'd be loans without interest. States and towns would be required to pay back to the government only the principal, the actual amount advanced to them, and they'd have fifty years in which to do this, two per cent a year for half a century.

Where will the government get the money to do all this lending? That question is answered in the presidential plan as reported. A bond issue, bonds to be sold for this special purpose, bonds to be paid off by the money the states and towns will pay back to the government. But the bonds will pay interest, while those local leans will pay none. The government will foot the bill for the difference. That's to be the federal contribution - the interest on the bonds, which would come to between six and seven mill bundred million dollars.

Such, they say, was the plan discussed in the White House today - where the President held conferences with his relief advisors. And, it is scheduled to be placed before Congress soon in definite and concrete form. Such is the report.

The advocates of this new pump-priming plan declare that it would give business a badly needed boost - revitalize business, is what they call it. They maintain that, put into effect this summer, it would promptly pull the nation out of the economic slump. A billion and a half in loans to states and towns, that plus a billion or more for W.P.A. relief projects, these two plus a billion and a half for R.F.C. loans. The total might run as high as four billion dollars for this year's pump-

Pury priming - what a pump, if it needs so much priming!

The Senate news concerns that theme so familiar to every American citizen - to every citizen of every place, for that matter. I suppose you could define the human race as - that species of mammalia which pays taxes. The Senate today started in on the job of deciding about the revised tax bill, which has been in the congressional threshing machine for a long time, under debate, in committee, out of  committee, and now before the Senate. I could perplex you for an hour with the intricacies of that tax bill - that is, I could if I were to take a couple of weeks to fathom those intricacies myself. The one thing about it that will strike instant recognition, is the feature that concerns undistributed profits. TKXXXXXXXXX With most of us we distribute our profits right away to the grocer, landlord and the electric company - although some of as haven't got any profits. Ruxxixix

But it's different with big corporations. They have profits - sometimes. And they don't distribute them - sometimes. And the government has been slapping on a tax - all of the time. But not any more, not if the present bill goes through the Senate.

Its salient feature is that it cuts out the undistributed profits tax.

Chairman Senator Pat Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee, which has just completed the job of revising the bill, asked his brother lawmakers to adopt it without delay. He praised the measure, which polished and patched, fiddle with and fixed up.

"I believe," said he, "that we have written a bill that will go far toward removing the fear that exists in this country and restore the confidence which some have lost."

So, he has no fear about the bill, and regards it with confidence.

Therefore, and in consequence, the Senate started out with quick moves to pass the bill, voting okay for several parts of it.

And the first votes put the okay on that section of the bill which eliminates the undistributed profits tax.

The news from the lower House was one all-day-longaccount of the fight over the Reorganization Bill. That battle has been going on day after day, and now is in its final phase.

The lawmakers are offering amendments - change this detail or alter that one. One amendment though was not a matter of detail at all. It was quite fundamental. It concerned that part of the bill called - the enacting clause. That's the phraseology in a congressional statute which goes:- "Be it enacted," or "It is enacted by Congress," - the words that exercise the congressional authority. If they were weren't in a bill, it wouldn't have any congressional sanction whatever.

Today Representative John J. O'Connor of New York,

leader in the opposition to Reorganization, offered an amendment to strike out the enacting clause. It's an old parliamentary trick, and I believe it has been known to work - the lawman's vote out the enacting clause, and then pass the bill, and then the bill is just so much conversation. We so what did Congress do? The vote that followed was some sort of test of strength. The administration forces won - by no huge majority, however. A hundred and ninety-one to a hundred and sixty-nine. So the enacting clause stays in the Reorganization Bill - while the boys are still proposing amendments.

Burga Caraba (Caraba) and a same and a same of Cardinal Innitzer to the Pope. That's quite inevitable, theme as bitterly controversial as the Nazi situation in Austria, and with personalities in the spotlight as exercise as a Cardinal and Pontiff. There's a Vienna report, said to emanate from high ecclesiastical quarters - a report that puts emphasis on a stern determination of Pope Pius. We know of course that the Vienna Cardinal hurried to Rome yesterday and went to the Vatican, and there he explained why he and the Austrian bishops advised the Austrian Catholics to vote Nazi in the coming election.

called Cardinal Innitzer to Rome, but did so with the peremptory decree that the Cardinal, head of the Church of Austria, must either make a personal report on the Nazi business - or retire to a monastery.

Purther Afirst the Cardinal sent his secretary, Monsignor of the Church, sent him to the Vatican to explain the situation. But the Pontiff refused to listen, and demanded that the Cardinal come - and report in person. These are Vienna rumors and I pass them along because of the extreme significance of the controvery between the Catholic Church and the Hitler regime in Germany.

Vienna itself knows little or nothing about all this, that is - the city or the people. Nazi censorship keeps everything a secret, and the rank and file of Catholics know nothing about the Vatican disagreement with the attitude of the Austrian bishops.

They think the pastoral letter advising them to vote "Nazi" was issued with the approval of the Pope.

There's grave international concern tonight about Spain -- and that concern is humanitarian. Today in Paris a group called the Spanish Committee of Civil me Peace spoke up. It's headed by a brother of the Spanish Ambassador to London -the Left Wing Ambassador. So it's a Barcelona group. Its purpose in Paris was to appeal to the radical French labor unions to do something to help Barcelona. But today the committee makes an appeal of a different sort -- calls upon the French and British governments to appear in behalf of the prisoners in Spain -- prisoners on both sides. They want some sort ofinternational action to press prevent massacres and executions. And there's word that Paris and London will use their influence in the cause of mercy, so little of which is to be noticed in Spain.

I know that in this land of ours there are many many people who sympathize with the Left Wing cause in Spain. I don't want to shock their feelings — and I can only repeat the news as it comes. Refugees crossing the French border today report that the policy of wholesale executions has been revived in Barcelona. The Left Wing Tribunal of Espionage and High Treason is ix at its grim work again. They're speeding up the trials, rushing them -- to go through the list of political prisoners as fast as possible. There are thousands of prisoners in the Barcelona jails and there are three prison ships crammed with them in the harbor. The number of executions in the last few days is given as three hundred.

And what's worse a recommend to death yesterday.

And what's worse a recommend to death yesterday.

Killings by bands of Pods. The porti, is that the extreme Red elements, knowing that Franco will put them before firing squads, are taking their refuge revenge in advance.

That Left Wing Committee in Paris declares that the Anarchists Party in Barcelona has decreed that — there shall be no exodus from the city. People won't be allowed to get away.

Not even members of the government — that's a special proint.

The Anarchists are determined that the Left Wing leaders shall stay in Barcelona, with their followers. No get-away to safety, the rank and file of the Reds at the mercy of the Fascists.

Specifically — they've refused to let Sener Prieto depart. That one-time chief of Left Wing Spain, recently deposed, decided that he should to to the Valencia territory and establish a new government there -- the because of that the Rebel drive rurri cutting Left Wing Spain in two. But the Anarchists told Prieto, No -- stay in Barcelona.

Barcelona leaders arriving in France -- fugitives. Some of the Left Wing ministers have accompanied their families, saying they would return to parcelona. A group of Soviet Russia military specialists arrived in France -- saying they were just taking a vacation.

thousands are pouring across the borders right now, eivilians and soldiers. Today five Left Wing staff officers entered entered France. The French have sent an extra regiment to the border to control the exedus especially as the whole division is said to be on its way across forth six thousand troops. They are reported lost in the mountains, trying to pick their way across the border.

What about the Americans -- those Americans of the Barcelona International Brigade. Today the American Chamber of Commerce laid plans to receive them. They'll be without credentials and money, the French can't be expected to take care of them. France is already over-run with refugees. So the American Chamber of Commerce in Paris has arranged to repartitude repatriate the Americans, send them back to the United States, when they get across the border -- those that the Three that have escaped the Barcelona defeat.

There's rioting in Paris tonight, huge crowds of Socialist and Communist workers battling with the police. The trouble began this morning when placards were posted in the working class sections of Paris, calling for mobilization of the workers to march on the French Senate. The Senate is considering the financial plan submitted by Premier Blum, a plan to raise money by a capital levy, seize wealth to tide the government over with its bad financial predicament. It was certain that the Senate would turn down the capital levy plan, and this would cause the overthrow of the Blum Popular Front, governments.

The appearance of the placards on the streets brought about a large mobilization of police. Swarms of mobile guards surrounded the Senate Building and kept people away for half a mile around. Then placards brought out the workers. They swarmed the police lines, carrying signs: "Long Live Blum." And their banners had a word or two about Caillaux, head of the Senate Finance Committee. The slogan read: "Caillaux to the Gallows!"

This was the state of affairs as the French Senate took a vote, and Ly au vote an exercising overwhelming majority that threw out the Blum capital levy plan, which is sure to cause the government to resign. That instantial disturbance. The Socialists and Communists started a battle with the police. They grabbed chairs from the outdoor cafes, broke them up and used them as clubs.

They tore apart iron railings from around the trees along the

the boulevards, and swung iron clubs. And the police fought back with their clubs. They drove the mob away from the Senate Building kept the mob at bay. And non tonight and them the battling crowds streamed down the boulevard, with a castle in France, a medieval stronghold built by the Knights Templar. One turret that rears above the eastle wall is fitted out as the studio of an artist. And another tarret is likewise an artist's studio. A stronge story of pigment and canvas is to be told about the old fortress of the Knights Templar, the story to be related tonight because Suzanne Valadon died today. She was an artist of note -- her son an artist of still greater note. But that is the story of strange tale of mother poors.

In the old days of the Latin Quarter, when many a great name flourished in art, there was a model of singular grace and beauty -- Suzanne Valadon. She posed for the greatest of those great men Renoir, Lautree, Degas. She had talent too, and those masters of renown taught her how to paint. She posed for them, and they gave her lessons. That was like the old Latin Quarter, and so is this:

Suzanne -- had a child, a son. Later on the Spanish artist, Utrillo, fell in love with her, married her, and gave the boy his name, to her some Maurice Utrillo, the boy became known-

Thanks to the lessons from the masters in the studies, she, made a name for herself in art. But, what was of deeper importance to her She taught her son how to paint.—all the eraft of the great artist. He displayed a vivid turn of genius - as an impressionist, ereater of the moody and exotic. He also displayed a weakness of character, even of mentality—alcoholic.

would ply him with brandy, lock him in a back room, and make him pay his bills by painting pictures for them. The paintings that Utrillo produced in that fashion sold for thousands of dollars. His own mentality was gone, sinking into shadow.

His mother rescued him, took him from his evil haunts.

By this time the mind of Maurice Utrillo had gone so far that he passed his time playing with children's toys.

Suzanne Valadon took him away from Paris, to the country to surroundings medieval, old castle of the Knights Templar.

There she fitted out one turret as a studio for herself. The other as a studio for her son. In one she painted. In the other she brought him back to health and painting -- quiet years of mother love and art. And Maurice Utrillo painted in such style that the French Government decorated him with the Legion of Honor.

So you can fathom the depth of grief at the castle of the Templars, start for Suzanne Valadon.

by Colonel Jake Ruppert and Joe DiMaggie. In New York the Colonel issued announcements saying just what he had said before, that Joe the high finance outfielder, would have to take the twenty-five thousand dollars a season offered him, or had get nothing not a penny more. He just wouldn't play baseball this comming summer.

In San Francisco, DiMaggio was told of this, and he said
"That's fair enough." His determination is just as inflexible as the Colonel's. "I'm standing pat on forty thousand dollars and nothing less. And I'm staying in San Francisco until I get it."

Whenever I don't think It II be that bad. The toughest hold-out dilemmas usually find some solution. Put It might be that inflexible Joe may stay in San Francisco and tend to his fishing with baseball missing its most popularized player and DiMaggio missing his highly paid and planning job.

Colonel Ruppert and his star outfielder are involved in hold-out troubles this spring. Here's another painful instance, which is played up in the BRIDGEPORT POST. That monument of sturdy journalism is all excited about another cantankerous hold-out aaffair, and is kicking up a scandal. What's the team in the case? Why, it's that speedy, hard-hitting aggregation known as - The Nine Old Men. And the POST prints letters from three of them.

There's a burning declaration by Colonel Lemuel Q.

Stoopnagle. "We should all band together," he writes, "and tie

Tycoon Thomas in a knot by refusing to play this summer without some kind of contract. Not only am I for a raise in salary but also for games of five innings, two changes of uniform, larger bats and

BASEBALL -3-

shorter umpires."

Another hold-out is aviator Frank Hawks who delcares himself thusly:- "I wrote Baseball Baron Thomas a sizzling letter. I won't monkey around any longer. He'll have to talk turkey, because I'm no goose."

3/2

That is seconded by cartoonist Hill-Billy Paul West who writes to the paper:- "Until Magnate Thomas gives me a contract of fifty cents a game I shall be forced to accept an offer to play with General Franco and his Rebel Nine. He offers three pesetas for thiree and a half innings, no spectators, no umpires and no senoritas with roses in their teeth." This letter is signed "Diz" West.

So there's the hold-out situation and the BRIDGEPORT

POST calls on me for a statement. Here it is: I will give the Nine Old Men a contract calling for; no money, a heavier ball, throw, longer base lines to run, twice as many holes in the infield, twice as many rocks in the outfield, hotter playing afternoons and the form off my glass of beer. Hill-Billy Diz West will have to take half a dozen senoritas with roses in their teeth -- and he doesn't like flowers.
