WAR IJ-P. Wed. apr. 4- 51.

A statement of the gravest kind was made in the House of Representatives today -- that among the Red forces massed in Manchuria there are nonChinese troops. And that doesn't mean -- North Korean troops. There is only one inference to me be drawn -Soviet Russian soldiers. The statement was made by Speaker Sam Rayburn arguing in favor of the draft bill. Giving the implication that Russian troops moved into Manchuria he said: "I think we stand in the face of EXEX terrible danger - and this may be the beginning of World War Three."

at the White House but we don't know whether or not he got the ominous information there. REMEREN Senate Democratic leader, McFarland of Arizona we also attended the meeting at the White House and he refused to say.

To a newspaper reporter he declared: "I know what he (Rayburn) knows. I know the situation is very serious.

I personally feel that what we say and do here may mean the balance between war and peace."

All this does have a sound most ominous, but it may be that the situation is kaing represented as being so serious to create an impression -- in the course of the Congressional debate at on the draft bill.

PARIS CONFERENCE FOLLOW MAR

In Paris tonight, the Soviets offered new proposals, which seem to bring matters nearer to a conference of the Foreign Ministers of the Big Four -- those top level talks the Deputy Foreign Ministers have been trying to arrange.

Soviet Representative Gromyko offered a compromise that might lead the way to a discussion of the cold war in general -- which the western powers want. Hitherto, Moscow has been trying to keep matters confined to Germany -- the question of West German disarmament. Gromyko's proposals tonight are complicated, but they give new hope that a top level four power conference may be arranged -- although the demands of the Western Powers are not met fully.

Late this afternoon the Senate passed the resolution on troops to Europe. The resolution okays the sending of four divisions of ground forces to General Eisenhower's Atlantic Pact army - but the it advises President Truman that he should get congressional approval before sending any more. This is merely -- advice. It has no force of law, but the claim is made that the resolution does impose on the President a moral obligation to get Congressional consent, before sending more American soldiers across the Atlantic.

The resolution at the same time asked that Spain and Western Germany be brought into the Atlantic Pact as soon as possible. The Administration objected to this, but the Senate voted its belief that Spain and western Germany should be made a part of the western system of defense.

We have vigorous denials tonight from the two winners of the Academy Awards -- Jose Ferrer and Judy Holliday. Both are named by the Committee on un-American Activities as having been in the words of the committee -- affiliated with five to ten Communist front organizations. To this Judy Holliday replies: "I am not a member of any organization replies: "I am not a member of any organization replies by the Attorney General as subversive. In any instance where I lent my name in the past it was certainly without knowledge that was such organization was subversive."

Word from Washington is that Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson has recommended new and stiffer controls to curb the rising prices of food. He has recentled a program to President Truman in which one feature is -- "freeze parity." For the farmers, parity is the level up to which they can borrow money from the government - and actually controls the farm prices. Right now parity is flexible subject to anxihing monthly change on the basis of what the farmer has to pay for the goods he buys. So, the Mobilization Chief wants to end the flexible change, and fix parity at the levels of last January Twenty-Five when the general price-wage freeze went into effect. But By keeping parity at the same level, that would stop the merry chase -- in which farm prices and costs of living go chasing each other upward in a spiral of inflation. That's the argument of Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson as he proposes freeze parity.

A remarkable business deal involving government surplus was divulged in Washington today. A Chicago truck dealer told of making a profit of four-hundred-and-twenty-five-thousand dollars, after paying two-hundred-and-seventy-nine thousand in fees and commissions to put the deal through.

Morris Green, a dealer in Chicago, bought a thousand trucks from the government of the Philippines. U.S.Government surplus -- disposed of out there after the end of the Second World War. Green told a congressional committee today that he bought the trucks for two-hundred or two-hundred-and-fifty dollars each, and had them shipped back to this country.

Here he resold them at a huge profit. The Atomic Energy Commission bought three-hundred-and-fifty-eight of them for as much as thirty-nine hundred dollars each.

The fees and commissions of two-hundred-andseventy-nine thousand dollars were paid for help in procuring the trucks in the Philippines, for aid in selling them over here, and for maneuvers in getting the Department of Commerce to lift a ban on imports of surplus material from abroad. There was a regulation to keep surplus material sold abroad from being resold in this country -- and that had to be lifted.

All of which explains how so much money had to be paid out, and yet a profit of four-hundred-and-twenty-five thousand dollars was left over.

AUTO WORKERS

At Cleveland, the auto workers have reelected Walter Reuther as President of the Union.

There wasn't much opposition, to begin with -- and what there was collapsed completely. Twenty-five hundred delegates representing a million and a quarter auto workers rose in acclamation -- re-electing Reuther to his fourth term as the head of the nation's largest union.

A quarter of a century ago an American professor from the great American University at Beirut, Syria, crossed the Arabian Desert to the ancient city of Baghdad. There he founded, in the city of the Caliphs, an American School for boys. At the feet of this educator and his wife, sat thousands of boys from Iraq, Iran, Arabia, and the land of Sindbad the Sailor. They became heads of governments, great merchants, educators -- and the influence of Calvin Staudt of Pennsylvania will continue in the Middle East for generations.

He has just passed away, at the home of a friend, Judge Bickel, in Baltimore. If we only had a few thousand Calvin Staudts scattered around this planet - and a few more educational institutions like his mass school in Baghdad, and the American University at Beirut, this would be a better world - and Americans would have far more friends in other lands.

Here's news from tobacco road. And tobacco is right. Today at Huntington, West Virginia the doctors operated on thirteen year old Jimmy Clark --who, on a lonely farm, broke his leg almost three weeks ago. He tried to ignore the injury - then hobbled for seven miles, making his way to the many hospital. Jimmy Comes from the back woods of Wayne, County, where the life of the mountaineers is primitive. He was working his uncle's farm, when he fell off a horse and broke his leg. He tried to pay no attention to the injury, textest at first, but then weakened so far as to make himself a pair of crutches out of bean poles and broom handles -- helped by his pal Donald Bunch. But the leg kept hurting something awful, and finally thirteen year old Jimmy thought he had better see a doctor. So he started out on his tches, hobbling along a rough mountain road, for seven miles -- until he came to a highway. There a passing motorist bicked him up and delivered him to a doctor, who promptly transferred the boy to a hospital at Huntington -- for treatment of the long neglected fracture.

In the hospital, Jimmy keek told the nurses
he had only been in school ten days in all his life and could neither read nor write. Then he put up an uproar -- when they tried to take his chewing tobacco away from him. "I learned to chew when I was six," he protested with dignity -- and hung onto his plug he had in his pocket. "Hews from Tobacco Road - all right -- with an means accent on tobacco.

Anderson left a considerable fortune in money, together with a whole assortment of rare and valuable belongings -- though the aged spinster lived in wretched misery, and worked on a drudging job in a factory.

Yet, she was born to prominense -- and at one time, won high success in her own right.

She, was a daughter of a well known Chicago architect, Theodore Andersen, and received a first rate education and became a lawyer. She rose to a high position in the legal world, and was an assistant State's Attorney from Mineteen Twenty-three to Minete twenty-seven. Then what happened? The answer is obscure -- some strange psychologic change. Today a sister of Marie Andersen said that, for some reason or other, the woman lawyer and one time as Assistant Statele Attorney abandoned her professional and social life, and became a sort of hermit. Her home was a mansion, which she owned, but she lived in the basement -- with no running water or electricity.

She got a job in a candy factory at small wages and wore no dress to work, only a man's overcoat over a slip with a piece of rope for a belt. On the job, she put on a factory apron. Yet in the house, they find a whole treasure of expensive clothes, dresses and gowns, linens, lace handkerchiefs, lingeric and gloves. There are many cartons of new clothes, with price tags on them still. The seventeen room house, moreover, is full of fine furniture, tapestries and paintings of great value.

Such is the strange case of the coccessful woman lawyer, as where one time was Assistant State's Attorney in Chicago.

We hear there is a rush on for American girls to become Queens, Princesses and Sultanas of the Orient. This is stated by a former wife of the Bey of Tunis, an American woman who married that Moslem potentate of North Africa -- the marriage ending, after a while, in a Mohammedan divorce.

Eatrine Sargent has arrived in New York, after having been, I suppose, Queen Katie of Tunisia. She says that Oriental potentates are going in for American brides, more and more. -- so that the lands of Islam offer glittering opportunities for girls in the U.S.A. who hanker for eastern romance, not to mention the gold and jewels.

But she cites her own experience, as an oriental Queen, and speaks the following warning for American girls. "Per continued. They should know they'll have to forget any notion about being equal to the man they might marry. The minute the ceremony is over the wife goes down on the list as a piece of property -- alorg with her husband's cash, jewels, houses, camels and goats."

Local beauties of Islam, she explains,
don't seem to mind, but American girls are humiliated,
by the experience.

She says she had to have her husband's crest. his coat of arms, tatooed on her forehead. Extr Also a triangular design, something like a western rancher's brand, was tatooed on her, chia. After the divorce, it took her a month in a hospital to get skin grafted onto her anatomy, and eliminate the trade marks of the Bey of Tunis. Even the oriental jewels were not so enchanting -- the diamonds, emeralds, and rubies. "I had a special costume I had to wear" she says, "and it included a diamond as big as an American quarter. Outto a anarklar that buge brilliant. But here's what she says. I had to wear the diamond in my navel (ix or tummy) and it was just plain uncomfortable. Besides", she adds, "I couldn't see it there." "So that, girls, is what you may have to go through if you aspire to be a Subtana out of the Arabian Nights.
