KOREA LT. PAGWED. War - 25-53

The battle in Korea has turned into a thundering artillery duel. Today's dispatches from the war front pictures massed batteries of American guns blasting the Chinese Communists on the Harnis Em follows the MERK hill called Old Baldy. repulse of two counter attacks -- the G I's minx floundering through a sea of mud and up slippery slopes. But -- failing to dislodge the Reds from the positions they had captured. The counter attacks ran into a storm of cannon, mortar and machine gun so violent fire -- , that they could make little progress. So preparations preparations a nalt was called while for a third Ex counter attack. The Communists meanwhile -- holding as much as three fourth of the strategic hill which, dominates the invasion route to Seoul.

The weather has been atrocious -- and paradoxical. The dispatches repeating the words -- rain and mud.

But today,  it is dusty. A dust laden wind -- sweeping the battle field. The explanation is that the wind, blowing today, from the Gobi Desert. That vast expanse of arid land in north-western China. The Gobi desert is far away from Korea, but today's dispatch calls the dusty  Dieseze -- a wind from the Gobi.

At the break of day -- tomorrow in Korea -American air power went into action. For a change, the weather was clear, and swarms of allied fighter bombers came xxx swooping down on Old Baldy, raking the Communists with bombs and flaming Napalm.
All this -- while the artillery duel continued.

The Senate vote on Charles E. Bohlen was put off today -- the decision to be made on Friday. This followed an angry debate -- in which estiturat Senator Knowland of California accused Senator McCarthy of Wisconsin of questioning his honesty. Knowland is for Bohlen, McCarthy against. The vote on Friday seems to be a sure thing -following a report by Senator Taft of Ohio today. He, with Senator Sparkman of Alabama studied the and says the record shows no F B I file evidence reflecting on Mr. Bohlen as a security risk. Which it is believed clinches the approval of the Senate for the nomination of Bohlen as U.S. Ambassador to Moscow.

REORGANIZATION

President Eisenhower has handed to Congress a plan for the reorganization of the Department of Agriculture. One purpose -- to administer farm programs in closer cooperation with local areas. And, adapt agricultural projects to regional and state and local conditions. Under the reorganization, the authority of Secretary Ezra

Taft Benson would be increased, and he would create three new high ranking jobs.

The plan is much like that submitted by President Truman in Nineteen Fifty -- but Congress rejected it. So now the Eisenhower Administration tries it all over again -- without much variation.

The White House announces that racial segregation will end in all schools and army posts.
Schools, that is, which are operated by with federal funds.

In some cases, schools on military property are run by local state authorities -- and some of these have racial segregation. Ways will be sought to end these conditions too. So says the white House announcement.

Here's a startling headline, after a fashion.

Election returns from Muscogee County, Georgia -- where they elected two members of the County Commission.

Which sounds like petty political news of little or no importance. But the two winning candidates are - Republicans. The first time that a Republican has won any office in Muscogee County, Georgia, since the days of the reconstruction.

In the November election, Georgia went Demecratic as usual -- although General Ike piled up a large vote.

So now, the G.O.P. trend in Dixieland seems to continue -- in Muscogee County, at any rate.

At any rate this is an indication of the strength of the Eisenhower administration.

The convention of the auto workers union at Atlantic City has re-elected -- all top officers, which includes Walter Reuther, the President. The result of the election was a foregone conclusion -- the three thousand delegates of the auto workers union staging snake dances water in the convention hall, as they shouted their support of the Reuther leadership.

When the House of Commons adjourned in honor of the late Queen Mother, he remained behind, sitting there, hunched over, lost in thought, staring into space. Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden walked over to him and said something but the Prime Minister seemed not to hear him. Then, finally, he rose, and walked out of the House of Commons, his head bowed down.

It is not so surprising that Winston Churchill, the elder statesman of Britain should take the passing of Queen Mother Mary so hard. They were - two of the last great Victorians.

In London, they are telling anecdotes about the Queen Mother -- some of which are now made public for the first time. For example, the story of how the great Ocean Liner, Queen Mary, got its name. The Cunard Linerhad a tradition of giving its vessels names ending in "i-a" like Mauretania, so the Directors decided to name their magnificent new vessel -- Victoria. Which would be nomage to the great Queen Victoria.

Sir Percy Bates, Chairman of Cunard went to King George the Fifth to tellhim about the decision.

Which he conveyed in the following stately words:

"We have decided" said he "to name in the ship after one of Britain's most noble Queens."

Tuplied the King,

"Oh; "Her Majesty will be pleased," replied

Sir Percy didn't venture to contradict the royal mistake. All he could do was to accept the inference and the liner was christened Queen Mary. All because the King made a mistake.

At Boston, a college stunt has been called off -- good sense prevailing. The Senate Internal Security Sub-Committee is beginning hearings in the city of the bean and the cod -- summoning the at least eight colleges in Massachusetts to present evidence concerning Red efforts to penetrate institutions of learning. INDIAN TREATY ROOM

Here's an answer to a question I asked on this program the other night. We noted, at the time, that President Eisenhower was holding his news conferences in the old State Department Building, in a chamber called -- the Indian Treaty Room.

The news men couldn't explain the name, couldn't figure out - what Indian Treaty had ever been dealt with in that room.

The answer comes from two U.S. Army

Colonels. Descendants of the Indian fighters of old

-- Colonel Francis Michler and Colonel Marion Maus.

The story, they write began at Fort Laramie in the Sioux country, Montana-Wyoming, in April Eighteen

Sixty-eight -- when a U.S. Commission, headed by General William Tecumseh Sherman, signed a treaty with the Sioux chieftains.

The two Colonels list the names of the Sioux leaders, and wonderful names they are -- Chief Red Cloud, Chief-Old-Man-Afraid-Of-His-Horse; Chief Spotted Tail, and Chief Big Mouth. The treaty provided for the peaceful withdrawal of U.S. Troops from the lands of the Sioux beyond the Missouri River. The Chiefs did the signing by 'touching the pen'.

The letter tells us how, two years later, several Chiefs of the Sioux were persuaded to come to Washington for a reinterpretation of the treaty. They now included a great brave of the Sioux, who was coming into prominence, Chief Sitting Bull.

"In Washington" the letter continues "they listened to the Great White Father, President Ulysses S. Grant, tell them that the real meaning of the treaty was -- that they myst leave their rich and happy hunting ground, and move to barren land further West, land without buffalo.

"The Chiefs accepted this" say the two Colonels "because they had allowed their spirits to be captured in the black image box." That is, they were photographed by the newly invented camera, and  Indian version of what happened.

"This all took place" says the letter

"in the newest and biggest government building at the time, the great reception room there." So that's how the Indian Treaty Room got its name.

of wint-sized woman' says the professor "one twist A

"It should be noted, however" writes the Colonels "that Sitting Bull, somehow or other, got his spirit back from the black magin image box. He realized that the Indian Treaty was something that is given by one hand and taken away by the other. So, he fought it for twenty years."

years was -- Custer's last stand. When in the battle of the Little Big Horn, General Custer and his force of U.S. Cavalry were wiped out by the braves of the Sioux. Sitting Bull remained the Chief of the Sioux, until he was killed in Eighteen Ninety.

So those are memories in the background as President Eisenhower holds his news conferences in the Indian Treaty Room. From Omaha -- an illuminating explanation of -why women prefer tall men for husbands. "r do they? The little shrimps don't seem to have too much trouble in the business of catching a wife. But, anyway, a scientist Dr. Victor Levine, tells us -- that women prefer tall husbands, because they are "so docile and manageable."
"A pint-sized woman" says the professor "can twist a giant around her little finger, but not the shorter fellow:"

He points out that Mapoleon was five-two; Hitler and Mussolini -- five-five; Stalin, five-four. "And they were" in the professor's words: "pugnacious and dominating."
