OCEAN OF STORMS
The story today
From Apollo Twelve - out of this world;
in fact, "out of sight" - as the youngstexs say-

Astronauts Pete Conrad and Al Bean setting down their "Intrepid" lunar lander, mack dat in the Ocean of Storms, exactly as planned. Indeed, less than six hundred feet from their primary target - that old Surveyor Space Craft that soft-landed on the moon nearly three years ago.

Thereby scoring another major success in lunar exploration - the first of many that were soon to follow.

Except for a few minor difficulties - including a failure of a TV camera -it Lax been a great gureatuncien, sofar,

Happiest of all about that - the two Moon men themselves - wavers bubbling with enthusiasm throughout.

When he jumped the final three feet from spacecraft to lunar surface - Pete Conrad - the shortest of the astronauts - observing: "Man, that may have been a small step for veil Armstrong but it's a long one for me."

OCEAN OF STORMS - 2

Later on, Conrad humming happily at times - chucking Y2 gleefully as he savored the thrill and delight of carrying out his assigned Moon tasks. Likewise Al Bean who said "I whistle while I work"- and whistled a few notes to prove it. They're back in the spacecraft now - safely

- bedded down for some well earned sack time. The same for Dick Gordon, circling overhead in the command ship - the Yankee clipper. $\mathbb{R}_{\text {There's more to come - }}$ including another Moon walk in just a few hours. The voyage of Apollo Twelve - less than dramatic than Eleven maybe - but still, another giant step for mankind.

WHITE HOUSE

Japan's Premier Salto - at the Than.
White House, $\boldsymbol{八}^{\prime}$ Getting a cordial welcome - from President Nixon; who noted that the return of Okinawa - is "the biggest issue pending between Japan and the U.S.; who added, nevertheless, that his parley with Sato - "will very probably be the most successful talks" the two countries have ever held. Salto observing, for his part, that a resolution of the Okinawa question - could "lay a foundation" for Japanese and American friendship for years to come.

After that, the key men adjourned to a private discussion - that lasted nearly two hours. The White House calling it - a very constructive meeting; also, "productive - but not yet concluded;" which means, hopefully, an agreement will be reached when the two again men meet tomorrow.

Elsewhere in Washington - the Senate gave final congressional improvement toady - to president

Nixon's requested draft lottery bill. The measure immediately sent to the White House - where the President is expected to sign it shortly. The new bill, in effect - paving the way for induction of nineteen year old first; if it works, as planned - thereby exposing a man to the draft for only one year - instead of a possible six years - as at presents lat the same time - a promise today from Senator Stennis - Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. A promise that his panel will hold extensive draft hearings - some time next year. But whether this will ever result in any additional draft reforms - hard to say. $\int_{\text {dennis observing: We cannot }}^{\text {Stent }}$ make any guarantee, of course, at this time.

> The start of a new "winter campaign" in Vietnam -- readily apparent in casualty figures for the past week we are told today. A preliminary estimate setting the number of enemy dead - at more than five thousand; as compared with South Vietnamese losses set at some six hundred - and American losses

said to be the highest in nearly two months.

Meanwhile, the $U$ s command in Saigon was taking its official note of that alleged massacre of South Vietnamese civilians. An Army spokesman saying the reported death toll - five hundred and sixty seven -- was greatly "exaggerated". Beyond that though - he said merely that an investigation is continuing/amix

From Sicily to the Alps nationwide general was on strike today clear across Italy; the tie-up involving an estimated fifteen to twenty million workers -- in practically every line of endeavor. For the most part - a peaceful protest against po spiraling rents and a dredtain housing shortage.

However, the demonstrations were to take a deadly turn at Milan, - when a band of about three thousand anarchists attempted to invade anion rally.

Police who were called to the scene - battling the anarchists for nearly two hours. The casualties including eight demonstrators who were injured -- also, some fifty policemen, one of whom died later from head wounds.

PARIS FOLLOW MILAN
While all this was going on in Italy - more of the same today in Paris; where Communist workers called a twenty-four hour strike - occupying and sealing off briefly the city's main electrical plant. This causing many a Frenchman to awake this morning - cold and shivering in a darkened house.

In the end, though - riot police smashed their way into the occupied plants; using heavy trucks and in one case at least - a bulldozer - to break through the striker's defenses. Then - a brief scuffle - the strikers routed. And Paris once again - the fabled City of Lights.

The worst killer disease in the $U S$ - of course, cancer. In Britain, though, something else $0(\Omega$ again. More than thirty thousand Britons dying each year from chronic bronchitis, believe it or not a disease in theory, at least - largely preventable. Thus, the explanation for a massive educational campaign - begun today at the British Medical Association. The drive including public distribution of millions of copies of a new booklet - entitled, "how not to get bronchitis."

First and foremost, a bit of advice: If you wake up in the morning with a cough - stop smoking;
you already have a mild case of bronchitis - and than ex continued smoking is nothing more than " slow suicide."

Another tip -keep your bedroom comfortably warm - and keep that window closed. The booklet further advising

A* Britons to avoid, in particular, foggy weather - or very cold, damp weather." Although that - in Briton, Warren say easier said than done.

A final note on the flight of Apollo Twelve comes today from Los Angeles. Police there reporting a sharp drop in crime - during the time of that lunar landing and subsequent Moon walk. For a few brief hours - the quietest "peak crime" period in recent L.A. history. A fact duly noted by the city's acting night chief of police - who further observed - we should have Moon walks more often it's great deterrent to crime.
