

L.T.-OLDS. THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1960.

GOOD EVENING EVERYBODY:

The scene of President-elect Kennedy's first news conference - his brother's home - at Hyannisport. The victorious candidate giving us his first appointment

The men around him in the White House - will include - as his special counsellor - Ted Sorensen. Special assistant to the President - Keith O'Donnell. Presidential press secretary - Pierre Salinger. Associate press secretary - Andrew Hatcher.

Oh yes - and two well known faces will be staying on -- in Washington, Allan Dulles - head of the C I A., and J. Edgar Hoover, head of the F B I. This has - foreign policy implications for Allan Dulles, naturally, is one American - hated by the Soviets. Had he been replaced in the Kennedy administration - Khrushchev certainly would have called it a condemnation of the Eisenhower intelligence ~~program~~.

program. Mr. Kennedy is leaving the Soviet dictator under no illusions about that.

Or, on the question of how the country feels -- about Dwight D. Eisenhower. When the question of his eye-lash victory at the polls came up - the President Elect denied it would diminish his mandate from the people. In his words - "the margin was narrow, but the responsibility is clear." Then John Kennedy added -- that this election is no repudiation of any person or any party. He considers it - simply a victory for the Democrats. By a narrow margin.

Well, tonight it's still not clear just who won the popular vote - with the final on California and Alaska uncertain. Tonight there appears to be a chance that more Americans voted for Nixon than for Kennedy. Only about three hundred thousand votes separate the two candidates out of a total of sixty-six million. And it is conceivable that late returns will show - an absolute majority for Nixon. In fact, Nixon himself predicts that absentee ballots - will in the end give him, his home state, California.

What effect could all this have? None - probably. But some Republicans claim there is a vague outside chance - of Nixon coming out on top in electoral votes - that a recount in several close states could change the verdict.

However the Kennedy victory seems to be almost a mathematical certainty.

ALGERIA

The French in Algeria are closer to Civil War - following those violent demonstrations. An angry crowd gathered at the war memorial in Algiers - to protest against ^{the} DeGaulle plan for an "Algerian Algeria". Three thousand right wing settlers - shouted "Algeria is French!" And, defied orders - to disperse.

When they refused to break up - DeGaulle's riot police charged in a flying wedge. Swinging batons - they forced the mob out of the square. The legitimate authorities claim to have Algeria under control - for the moment. But they are not making any predictions about tomorrow - Armistice Day, when the rightists traditionally demonstrate in favor of a French Algeria.

The situation is so dangerous that DeGaulle has ordered his Defense Minister to Algiers - to forestall a ~~ne~~ possible army revolt. The President of France is demanding a pledge of loyalty - from every member of his cabinet.

The latest is that DeGaulle himself may fly to Algiers - for a first hand investigation. ~~He's~~ caught between right and left - between the French settlers and the Moslem rebels; ^{he's in a} ^{spot} ~~A tough situation~~ - for a moderate who wants to put through a ~~program following the middle~~ of the road ^{program.}

CONGO

Three U N columns are converging on Niamba - in the Congo. ~~That's~~ the area of Katanga province - where an Irish patrol was ambushed yesterday. Two members of the patrol escaped into the jungle, where they were later picked up by a helicopter - and flown to Leopoldville. Their experience so harrowing - they are still to^o dazed to explain ^{exactly} what happened. But they do say ~~that~~ they were ambushed - by the fierce Baluba ^{who are} tribesmen, now in open revolt. Nine members of the patrol were overwhelmed - in the worst Congo atrocity involving the U N.

^{According to} ~~Here's~~ the latest, ^{and} The Balubas have attacked the advancing U N forces ^{and} a battle is raging in the jungle.

MISSILE

The Polaris missile launched at Cape Canaveral today - was held together by glass; a combination of glass filaments and resin - stronger than steel. A new chemical discovery that adds up to - in the words of one scientist, "a major technological advance in missilry."

The Polaris thundered up from its launching pad - leaving a long tail of white vapor behind. It's crimson nose flashed in the sunlight for a moment - then hurtled down over the Atlantic range, landing in the target area - sixteen hundred miles away.

BLIMP

~~I guess you've all heard the saying a that the~~ ~~U S Navy never dodges its commitments~~ ~~and~~ From Barnegat, New Jersey, ~~we have a story,~~ ~~that seems to~~ we hear from ~~prove it.~~ Told by [^]Sergeant Stanley Zenew -- who collects tolls on the Garden State Parkway.

Sergeant Zenew was on duty when a Navy blimp appeared over head. The blimp - flying up the parkway.
Suddenly the pilot leaned from the window - and began to wave a white handkerchief. The toll collector ran out to see what he wanted -- whereupon the handkerchief came fluttering down, onto the parkway. Inside the handkerchief - a quarter. And a note saying - "the Navy pays its way." The pilot, forking over the parkway toll - then zooming off, ~~into the distance.~~

CHIMPS

In Houston, Texas, Ben Friedman has come up with a new gimmic in labor-management relations. Ben ^{who} runs a furniture factory, ^{is} adding three new workers to his labor force, Fudgie, Pudgie, and Bobbie. They ^{are} chimpanzees; - and, Ben claims he's dead serious about it.

He's training the chimps to do most of the tasks in the factory - from stuffing pillows, to attaching chair legs. Also - to carry their own lunch pails - full of bananas.

The manager of the firm claims - that his chimps can handle the job, as well as ~~at~~ anyone. He also ~~and~~ predicts that they'll be ~~maxx~~ happier at it than ^{human} workers, ~~of the more ordinary type.~~

He points out that his new ~~is~~ work force - enjoys some notable advantages. They don't have to buy clothes - or pay rent. Since they are vegetarians - ~~maxx~~ their food bills don't amount to much. And, they've never heard about - higher wages, or better working conditions. The chimp boss, Dick, says chimpanzees ought to be ideal employees.

PRINCESS

Around London, they^are asking tonight - "is Princess Margaret on strike against the Queen?" Seems like a novel idea - one royal sister striking against the other. But the ~~main~~ point is - that Margaret seems to be deliberately passing up formal ceremonies. Last week she ~~is~~ stayed away from the opening of Parliament. An occasion that no member of the royal family is supposed to miss.

Today she was conspicuously absent - when the Queen presided over a diplomatic reception at Buckingham Palace.

Most Londoners believe the Princess really is on strike, and they think they know the reason why. Margaret's husband - Anthony Armstrong Jones, is a commoner - hence not eligible to sit with royalty on public occasions. So the belief is that Princess Margaret will politely snub the Queen - until Tony receives a title.

or a Marquess or some such.
