EOREA CITAR Theoday - Nov. 14-50.

A violent air battle raged in the skies over North.

Lorea today. Fifteen Russian-built jet fighters pounced on eighteen U.S. Super Fortresses, and their escort of Shooting Stars. In the five-minute air battle, two Super Forts were damaged and forced to make emergency landings with three injured airmen. No Shooting Stars were hit.

A tail gunner in a Super Fort succeeded in winging one of the enemy jets. The central gunner in the same B-29 poured a burst of fire into the MIG 15 which then spun to the ground and burst into flames. The other enemy jets escaped.

The bombers had just plunged through heavy antiaircraft fire and bombed the railway bridge localing from Similia to Antung across the mouth of the Yalu River.

On some sectors of the front there was light skirmishing, but for the most part ground troops crouched in their foxholes -- numbed by the freezing weather. At one point, units of the U.S. First Marine Division plodding through snow, without opposition, gained two miles. This brings them almost within sight of the great Chosin Reservoir where Chinese forces massed before the hydro-electric installations have fallen back under heavy Marine assaults.

A stinging Siberian gale whipped down through the bleak mountain passes of Morthern Korea today. With it came heavy snow and icy weather. The temperature already ten below is steadily falling;
Before long is expected to plummet to forty below.
In for holes all along the line, Marines and Army Infantry men are shivering in the bitter cold. Many of them still only wearing cotton summer uniforms over woollen underwear. Spending their spare moments chopping down trees for fires to try and keep warmin the few arms where fires are allowed at all.

High on the Chosin Plateau a Marine Captain today counted "hundreds" of cases of frozen feet - many men frost-bitten during the night being pulled out to hospital still in their sleeping-bags.

Army clothes experts went to Korea in September to decide on best types of winter garb. An Eighth Army Spokesman said heavy woollens and parkas are already "in the supply " lines."

But so few at the front - there just aren't enough to go around. Somebody sceme to have fallen down badly on that one!

NORTH POLE FLIGHT

There were big doings at Fairbanks, Alaska, today, and the figure was Three-Hundred-and-Seventy-five.

That is -- the three-hundred-and-seventy-fifth Squadron made its three-hundred-and-seventy-fifth flight. The meaning of that in terms of prodigious adventure is easy to state. The squadron is the one that makes regular sky voyages over the Morth Pole, and all of those flights were -- over the top of the world, the Pole.

This has been going on ever since Nineteen

Forty-seven, with a schedule of a take-off every other day -- and now they did it for the three-hundred-and seventy-fifth time. The plane, a B-29 bomber -- with a languishing, yet unromantic name. With the madcap sense of humor of the men of the air, they call that

- Pole -- call

superfortress -- THE LONESOME POLECAT. The take-off was tough, in a blinding snowstorm -- (and the round-trip) to the North Pole man nearly four thousand miles, which took fifteen hours and fifty-five minutes. On the return trip the blizzard was still raging and the LONESONE POLECAT had to be brought in by radar.

A stately reception committee was waiting, headed by Secretary of the Air Force Finletter and Assistant Secretary of the Air Force Barky Johnson -- not to mention fancus flying officers like Colonel Bernt Balchen, that veteran of veterans in the ways of the Arctic.

The purpose of these routine flights to the North Pole is seather observation -- bringing back data from the endless ice fields of the regions where cold weather is born. Sounds like the very fixmax climax of northern peril -- so what's the record for safety? Well, as the Three-Hundred-and-Seventy-Fifth squadron completes its Three-hundred-and-seventy-fifth flight, the safety record is perfect. Neither a plane or a wayhe we need to be taxed a little wore, anythm President Truman called today for the immediate passage of a bill by Congress which would provide four billion dollars excess profits tax. The tax would be retroactive to July first of this year and would help mounting war costs and act as a weapon against inflation.

The request was made in a letter to Robert

Doughton, Chairman of the House of Representative ass and Means Committee on Taxes. The urgent tone of the President's letter indicates that he wants the tax passed by the Lame Duck Session of Congress due to meet on November twenty-seventh.

Dr Henry Garland Bennet, President of Oklahoma A am W College was named today as new head of Point Four Program. Dr Bennet who was U.S. delegate to the first meeting of the U.N. Agricultural organization, will take an indefinite leave from his college post to administer the program of American aid to under-developed areas of the world.

LAKE SUCCESS

From Prague tonight word is that the Chinese Communist delegation on its way from Peking to Lake Success will arrive in Czechoslovakia tomorrow night.

The Chinese Reds will then apply for U.S. visas before setting out for New York -- probably on Thursday.

From Nepal reports tonight tell enutiny loyal Nepalese State troops - Ghurka warriors -turning against their feudal Prime Minister who deposed King Tribhuvana. Ghurka forces serving with the British in Mongkong and Malaya also bitterly resent what the Prime Minister has done.

In the capital of Khatmandu the autocratic Prince Minister President is said to have arranged the marriage of his grand-daughter to the new King, three-year old Gyanendr Only in this way can the infant monarch be crowned - for in Nepalese custom no backdor may ascend the throne. The marriage ceremony was carried out in simple Hindu style - the bride choosing her husband by simply placing a garland of flowers around his neck.

In Calcutta the word is that Mepalese

Nationalist forces are already in the outskirts of Khatmandu. One press report even has it that the Prime Minister has surrendered -- but there is no confirmation of this.

MEPAL = 2

With Mepalese State troops mutinying all along the line - and with rising support in Mepal for the Nationalist Party - it seems that the Prime Minister's autocratic rule must soon be at an end. With King Tribuvana back on his rightful throne.

wildly conflicting reports. This one from the wildly conflicting reports. This one from the frontier rumor center of Kalimpong. It says that the Chinese Reds are in Lhasa — have reached an agreement — the Kashag hering the Dalai Lamai Nor call with the Tibetan Kashag. This report has it that inder the agreement Tibet would recognize Chinese suserainty. That China would assume responsibility for Tibetan Foreign Relations, communications. The agreement is said thave been negotiated by Taktra Rimpoche, the 7447. old aged regent of the Dalai Lama.

But in New Delhi this report has been accepted with a reserve. Indian officials believe the Reds may still be some distance from Lhasa bogged down in the towering snowbound Himalayan mountains. The catch in that to that those Himalayan passes are not necessarily hopelessly snow - bound yet!

FOLLOW TIBET

At last word, Tsepon Shakabpa, head of the Tibetan Mission in Kalimpong has denied that the Chinese Shakabpar holy Reds are in Lhasa. Tsepon says that the city is quietthat so far there has been no threat to Lhasa. The the new for min. — but I believe he is still fring.

A second slaying in Venezuela. This time General Urbina -- the alleged leader of yesterday's successful attack on President Carlos Delgado Chalbaud. General Urbina, described as a man "of violent character", was shot down by guards while -- "attempting an escape,"-The official story runs, -- General Urbina was wounded in the leg during the President's assassination. So seriously that gangrene set in. He was being transferred from jail to a prison hospital where his leg was to be amputated. On the way he was said to have atte escape -- shot down by his guards.

It seems strange that a man whose leg was about to be amputated could very well attempt an escape.

Brings to mind the old Latin-American and custom of the so-called Ley de Fuga -- the law of flight. A prisoner conveniently shot down by guards, who fall a few steps behind him -- they allege he was attempting an escape.

A technique much in vogue during the Machada lictatorship in Cuba -- and also widely used by other strongarm Latin-American regimes.

MICHIGAN ELECTION RESULTS

In Michigan tonight -- complete after election day the count, is at last out the the freeze of Denocratic incumbent Governor, Mennen Williams, with heng on to his post. During the neck and neck race as returns came including fast week, the lead between Mennen Williams and his Republican opponent, Harry Kelly had changed six times. But the Good, still are not.

the days of the towering lighthouse lighthouse seeper's daughter the courts may soon be at an end. From the Sperry Gyroscope for pany at Great Neck on Long Island comes news tonight of a new electronic lighthouse sending out radar signals in place of the old-fashioned flashing beams. These radar beacons can be picked up electrons and fog which blanketed the old-fashioned lights.

Four beacon lighthouses are already operating around our coasts -- heading off shipping from treacherous perils of the sea. So the lighthouse beepera daughter may become a radar expert.

SANTA CLAUS

Six weeks to Christmas and at the G.P.O.

Copenhagen, Denmark the letters are pouring in. From all over the world they come with the same address -
Santa Claus, Greenland. The Danish Travel Association, swamped with letters from more than twenty thousand children, sent out an urgent appeal tonight for volunteers -- volunteer Santa Clauses to help answer these letters.

Here's a bit of news that could provide an idea for a comedy. A development of the old theme - from poor to rich. From milkman to millionaire, then milkman all over again. Up again, down again and on ad infinitum.

Gunnar Seaberg, is a Chicago milkman, whose aunt in Denmark left him a fortune, three million kroner. So the milkman millionaire and the Mrs. went to Denmark to collect the legacy - about Six Hundres Thousand Dollars, and worth a lot more over there.

But Gunnar found he could not take the money out of Denmark -- the usual thing in Europe, blocked currency.

The only way to enjoy the wealth was to live in Denmark. But that meant saying "Goodbye to Chicago," where the family, with children, here been settled for years -- and there were a lot of rleasant memories along the old Chicago milk route.

The Seabergs decided to compromise. They stayed a while in Denmark, living in splendor - millionaires for a year. Now they've come back -leaving their fortune in Copenhagen. They're on their way to their modest Chicago home -- where Gunnar will resume his milk route, delivering the bottles of Grade-A to the customers every morning.

But, in a year or so, the Seabergs are going back to Denmark again -- and have another fling as millionaires. They might keep that up indefinitely -- from milkman to millionaire, and back again.

Nice variety in that, don't you think,
